Enterprising councils - Local Government Association Charging and Trading: The Local Government Act 2003 1 Local Government Updated June 2010 Charging and Trading: The Local Government Act 2003 By Stephen Cirell and John Bennett INTRODUCTION The issue of Charging and Trading has been of relevance to local authorities since Local authority trading, charging and procurement The trading company route (under Section 95 of the Local Government Act 2003) is the least used route to trading and charging. Within Scotland and Northern Ireland this is not an option. Guide to local authority charging and trading The guide explains the differences between charging and trading and outlines the role of trading companies where local authorities are seeking to act for a 'commercial purpose'. There is also a list of public bodies with whom local authorities can trade under the 1970 Goods and Services Act. The legal framework surrounding trading and charging powers Local Government Act 2003 •Relevant authority may charge for a service if— •authorised, but not required, to provide the service •the recipient has agreed to its Charging and trading – a new dawn This led – through the Local Government Act 2003 – to new general powers to charge and trade. The power to charge is unrestricted and applies in all cases where there is no specific power to charge for the provision of a service. All charging is essentially on a cost recovery basis, although there is always scope for a bit of creativity.
