Co-Financing Hollywood Film Productions with Outside ... Co-financing arrangements in which investors from outside the motion picture industry become co-owners of the completed films are a common phenomenon in Hollywood. Kay H. Hofmann analyzes the conflicts of interest and the organizational problems that may arise between the experienced major studios and investors with comparably low industry expertise. Investing in Film Production – For Movie Fans only, or for ... The fact that larger movie productions cost upward of $100 million and the financial climate has been tougher, now means that there are now some opportunities for private investors to get involved, but this is often through private investment pools or funds that finance a group of films rather than just the one project in particular.
